EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

47 states enacted budgets during the FY2026 cycle, including 32 annual budgets and 15 biennial budgets for FY2026-2027. Three states – Kentucky, Virginia, and Wyoming – are in the middle of their biennial budget cycle. Of these, Virginia was the only state to amend its biennial budget for the upcoming fiscal year. Three states have not enacted budgets as of the time of this publication: North Carolina, Michigan, and Pennsylvania. However, Michigan’s fiscal year does not start until October 1.

STATE BUDGET THEMES

Education

Education costs were a primary focus for states. Notably, school choice vouchers are becoming increasingly popular with 32 states already having some version of a school voucher program. Additionally, some states have moved to universal voucher programs or expanded funding to provide financial assistance to more children. For example, Arkansas increased funding for its universal program by $90M, for a total of $187.49M in FY2026. Another policy gaining increasing popularity is cell phone bans. Delaware, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, and Oklahoma all included these bans in their FY2026 budgets, joining the 20 states that already have active laws or executive orders that ban or restrict cell phone use in schools.<sup>1</sup> However, Delaware’s policy is voluntary. Seven states funded teacher salary increases, with some electing to raise the starting salary. South Carolina raised the starting salary for teachers to $48.50K and New Mexico increased each tier by $5K, to a starting salary of $55K. Other states provided additional benefits to teachers like paid parental leave in Alabama and Tennessee. This includes several other programs to fill teacher vacancies and bolster the workforce in Arizona, California, Illinois, Idaho, and Mississippi. Finally, states have increasingly dedicated funds to improve the quality of education in Georgia, Louisiana, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, Oregon, Tennessee, and Utah. Notably, in line with the governor’s proposed budget, Ohio has tied $200M for higher education institutions to the employment outcomes of their graduates, rewarding colleges and universities that help students secure employment.

Workforce Development

States frequently tie workforce development with educational programs. Ohio expanded pre-release vocational training for individuals leaving incarceration and re-entering the workforce. Missouri also opted to allocate funding to assist individuals with attaining employment after incarceration. Massachusetts allocated $3.32M to expand and diversify registered apprenticeships, with many other states also investing in similar programs, like Nebraska’s Teacher Apprenticeship Program or Florida’s $60M investment to expand apprenticeships. Other states appropriated funds to foster workforce growth in other areas. Iowa dedicated over $14M to its Economic Development Authority, funding at least three different workforce development programs. Tennessee dedicated a substantial amount of funding to many workforce programs, including $45.80M to its Rural Development Grant Fund to assist distressed communities. The state also appropriated funding to several other programs to recruit new businesses and startups, in addition to its music and film industries.

Medicaid + Healthcare

As noted above, Medicaid funding was a key consideration during the FY2026 budget season. In FY2026 enacted budgets, most states allocated funding to provide services for vulnerable populations, bolster waivers, stabilize the Medicaid workforce, and build capacity for behavioral health services. Nearly a third of states provided funding to support maternal health, with Georgia and Illinois allocating funding to expand and maintain maternal home visiting programs and New Hampshire supporting rural maternal health emergency medical services, among many other programs identified by states. Elderly and disabled individuals also saw increased financial support through Medicaid programs, like a low-cost prescription drug program for elderly MaineCare enrollees, and Medicaid waivers. Many states appropriated funding to decrease or eliminate waiting lists for services by adding new slots, like Georgia, Kansas, Nebraska, Tennessee, and Utah. Other states focused on providing rate increases, for waiver providers and for other practitioners serving Medicaid enrollees. For example, Iowa increased nursing facility, dental, and pharmacy rates; Texas increased the base rate waiver personal attendant services to $13 per hour; and Vermont raised rates for Federally Qualified Health Centers (FQHCs) and Rural Health Centers (RHCs). Finally, many states focused on increasing the capacity of the healthcare system. Idaho appropriated nearly $1M to fund several new healthcare residencies across the state for family medicine, dentistry, and behavioral health.

Behavioral Health

Many states prioritized allocating resources to build capacity for behavioral health services, including inpatient services. At least 13 states put forward funding to bolster the number of beds available, like Colorado's $6.40M investment to increase beds at the state mental health hospital; North Dakota's substantial $332.30M commitment to provide over 200 new beds for people in need of acute behavioral health services; and New York's $160M to provide 100 new forensic inpatient psychiatric beds in New York City. Other behavioral health initiatives included funding to support substance use disorders (SUD), like Florida's Coordinated Opioid Recovery Network and Illinois's efforts to integrate comprehensive behavioral health services with physical healthcare to expand access to care. Several states also took action to fund mental health services for school-age children. This included nearly $50M in Georgia to create the Student Support Services Program and Oregon's $25M investment in community-based services for mental health and SUD treatment for children and youth, alongside school-based health and suicide prevention services.

Housing

Access to affordable housing is a concern for nearly all states. A handful of states pursued creative solutions in FY2026 to address issues. In Hawaii, the legislature continued funding the Kauhale Initiative with a $91.80M appropriation which provides deeply affordable communal housing and access to healthcare. Utah funded several programs to help address homelessness and targeted efforts to lower the cost of buying a home for low- and middle-income families. This includes $20M to the First Time Homebuyer Program and $2M to the Shared Equity Revolving Loan fund to assist with down payments, upfront costs, and more. Similar programs like the Florida Hometown Heroes Housing Program and Ohio HOME Program which provide financial assistance to eligible residents who are buying a home were also funded for FY2026. Rhode Island and New York took different approaches. The Rhode Island legislature introduced a new tax on non-owner-occupied houses valued over $1M that are not rented out for at least half the year, with the tax revenue dedicated to low-income housing tax credits. New York has banned private equity purchases within the first 90 days a home is on the market. Many states also pursued property tax relief, such as Arizona, Montana, and New Jersey.

Economic Development

Many states either began or continued tax reductions for residents in FY2026. Idaho, Iowa, Montana, New York, Wisconsin, Oklahoma, Ohio, South Carolina, Utah chose to reduce income tax rates, with many pursuing flat tax rates for all tax brackets. Oklahoma chose to eliminate the three lowest tax brackets and reduce the remaining rates by 0.25%, while Iowa made a substantial jump from 5.70% to a flat rate of 3.80%. New York made several changes to its tax structure by reducing the rates of the first five tax brackets and extending rates for high-income filers. The legislature also funded an expanded child tax credit of $1K for children younger than 4 and a $500 credit for children ages 4-16. Florida provided tax relief by repealing its business rent tax as well as creating and expanding several sales tax holidays for various goods. Notably, Washington and Maryland increased taxes, with Maryland creating a progressive tax on high-income filers.

Conclusion

Despite the many successes of the FY2026 budgets, there were some challenges faced by states. Transportation proved to be a pain point for Illinois and Oregon, with budgetary shortfalls for local and statewide transportation. At least 14 states struggled with seeing lower than anticipated revenue projections during the legislative session, including Alaska, Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Nebraska, Nevada and South Dakota. However, the true economic impact remains to be seen. Many states were also stalled in passing budgets, with many states not passing bills until the last minute. Finally, a handful of states had to reduce spending levels significantly to overcome structural deficits, like Minnesota, Maryland, and Washington. However, other states pursued spending cuts to align with the federal priorities of streamlining government and reducing waste. Lastly, some governors exercised their veto powers to restrain spending, anticipating future cost concerns.

PLANNING FOR FY2027: FEDERAL LEGISLATIVE LANDSCAPE AND EXECUTIVE PRIORITIES

Despite significant changes in the federal government's approach to funding various programs, due to the timing of the passage of House Resolution 1 (H.R. 1) and state budgetary processes, states varied in the extent to which changes in federal funding were built into their budgeting assumptions for FY2026. As such, more significant impacts can be expected in FY2027 and moving forward. Many external factors impacted states' budgeting processes during the FY2026 budget season. Most notably, Congress passed H.R. 1, also referred to as the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (OBBBA), which the President signed into law on July 4. Lengthy and complex, H.R. 1 generally shifts many costs from the federal government to the states. This includes significant changes to Medicaid financing, Supplemental Nutrition Aid Programs (SNAP), and additional tax code changes beyond the extension of the 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act. It is also the first time that states are being asked to be responsible for the cost of certain programs, like SNAP. Other budgetary concerns come from potential changes in federal funding for natural disasters and Affordable Care Act Marketplace health plans, as well as tariffs.

Medicaid + Healthcare<sup>2</sup>

Medicaid spending generally accounts for a large percentage of state budgets despite the joint state and federal partnership that covers part of the cost. H.R. 1 prevents states from implementing new provider taxes and lowers the percentage of existing provider taxes in expansion states by 2.5 percentage points over four years, beginning in FFY2028. Additionally, the bill reduces new State Directed Payments (SDPs) limit from the average commercial rate (ACR) to 100% of Medicare rates for expansion states and 110% for non-expansion states, starting July 4, 2026. Grandfathered SDPs will be reduced by 10% year-over-year beginning in rating period on or after January 1, 2028, until achieving parity to Medicare. Together, these changes will significantly reduce the amount of Federal Medicaid dollars states are able to draw down to fund their programs.

During initial debates around H.R. 1, many stakeholders raised concerns about the impact of these changes on rural hospitals, many of which are dependent on these funding mechanisms. In response to these concerns, lawmakers included the Rural Health Transformation Program in the final version of the bill, which allocates $50B over five years ($10B per year) to states to support efforts that bolster and improve rural health. Some stakeholders maintain that this funding, distributed by an application process, will not be enough to keep rural providers afloat. States will have to determine the financial impact of these changes on their Medicaid budgets and identify cost savings or draw funds from other sources. The application for this funding is not yet available at the time of publication, though H.R. 1 requires CMS to review applications and announce awards by December 31, 2025.

Other Medicaid provisions in H.R. 1 will also impact state agencies and budgets. With the addition of work requirements and more frequent eligibility checks for the expansion population, states may need to upgrade their eligibility and enrollment systems as well as increase staffing to comply. Moreover, states will eventually need to comply with requirements to check more frequently for deceased beneficiaries and providers. Some federal funding is available for these costs but will likely impact states' available funds.

Additional legislation or lack thereof may impact State-Based Exchanges for individual healthcare coverage. The Enhanced Premium Tax Credits (EPTCs) are set to expire at the end of this year and must be reauthorized by Congress to continue. If the tax credits expire, the cost of health plans is expected to jump significantly. Many insurers have already requested higher premium rates from states, with an average increase of 18%. Legislators may consider different options to make healthcare coverage more affordable for their residents to avoid an increase in uncompensated care. More detailed information on the impact of H.R. 1 to states can be found in Sellers Dorsey's summary Medicaid-Related Provisions in the Congress-Passed Budget Reconciliation Bill.

Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program<sup>3</sup>

The legislation also made several significant changes to the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP). State budgets are most likely to be impacted by the new provision, which will require states to pay a certain percentage of the cost of benefits. Previously, states did not pay any amount towards the cost of providing SNAP benefits, instead, sharing a percentage of administrative costs with the federal government. Beginning in FY2028, states must pay anywhere from 5-15% of the cost of SNAP benefits depending on their error rate.

A state with an error rate less than 6% will have costs fully covered by the federal government. A payment error rate is a measure of how accurate a state's eligibility and benefit determination process is. States with higher error rates must pay a higher percentage of cost. In FY2024, the average error rate was 10.93%. Although the legislation does provide delayed implementation for states with high error rates, this is a new, significant cost to states. Lawmakers and leaders will have to determine what, if any, funding can be used to cover the cost of SNAP benefits outside of reserve funding.

Natural Disasters and Emergencies<sup>4</sup>

There has been great uncertainty around the future of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) in 2025. Many states have experienced significant, costly disasters from natural disasters like flooding, wildfires, and tornadoes. The Trump Administration originally indicated that it wanted to dissolve the agency and place full responsibility for disaster response onto states with a block grant program, citing the slow, burdensome experience many survivors and states experience after a disaster. Currently, Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem has implemented stringent rules on contracts and spending within the agency in conjunction with the withdrawal of many FEMA grants to assist communities in developing more resilient infrastructure. While the full dissolution of FEMA no longer seems to be the primary goal of the Administration, states may consider options to develop state disaster funds in the wake of federal changes to FEMA or more delays in having state of emergencies approved.

Economic Policies<sup>5</sup>

Tariffs are a priority for the Trump Administration, with aims of improving American manufacturing and creating jobs, among other goals. However, the tariffs are expected to have a disproportionate impact across states. Many Midwest states are larger exporters of agricultural products that are likely to feel the impact of reciprocal tariffs or reduced demand overseas. States with large manufacturing industries, like Michigan or South Carolina, may be impacted as businesses experience a spike in increased costs from imported parts or similar declines in foreign markets. These industries may choose to move all production to U.S. to avoid tariffs but will likely still see short-term costs increase, impacting business in the state. Likewise, consumers may see a large increase in costs for everyday goods if businesses decide to no longer absorb the cost of tariffs. States that are more reliant on sales tax revenue, such as states with little to no personal income tax, may see a decline in revenue if consumer spending slows in response to tariffs. Notably, recent reports show that consumer spending has remained largely stable through the summer, though the threat of increased prices remains if businesses are no longer able to absorb increased costs. However, extended and expanded tax cuts at the federal and state levels may outweigh any negative impact of tariffs, in addition to any businesses that bring production back to America.

SUMMARY

In summary, in a rapidly evolving economic landscape, many factors weigh on state budgets and this is only a small picture of what states must consider in shaping their fiscal priorities. At the federal level, additional costs for many existing programs like SNAP are being, or will soon be, passed down to states. There may be other impacts on states and their residents, which include potential spikes in Affordable Care Act Marketplace health insurance plans as well as more restrictive enrollment policies; the increasing cost of natural disasters and potential changes to federal emergency response; and the impact of tariffs on businesses and consumer spending that may influence a portion of state revenue. However, while some states are concerned about the upcoming changes, some lawmakers see opportunities to improve processes and foster innovative solutions.

Either way, states will have to navigate many changes during the FY2027 budget season and beyond as all but three states enacted their budgets prior to the passage of H.R. 1. Medicaid funding and other policies like work requirements and eligibility determinations are likely to have an outsized impact on state budget priorities as Medicaid spending is generally a large portion of state cost. However, many states ended FY2025 in a strong position and have substantial reserves, with many states reaching historic levels of Rainy Day funds, like New York, or reaching statutory limits on funds, like Florida's Budget Stabilization Fund. It remains to be seen how states will navigate the many competing funding priorities through the end of 2025 and into FY2027 while also creating innovative solutions to help meet the needs of their residents. Already, Colorado Governor Polis has called a special session to address the financial status of the state following the passage of H.R. 1. Governor Kotek of Oregon also called a special session, though focused on the state's transportation budget. Other states may follow suit and revise their spending plans in response to the legislation while others stay the course through this fiscal year.
